A Catastrophe Rivaling the Destruction of Herculaneum and Pompeii.

SLOTTED OUT.

Rome, July 30.—[Special Cable.]—An earthquake-shock destroyed the greater part of the island of Ischia, in the Mediterranean, seven miles distant from the Province of Naples and twenty-three miles from Naples. Thousands, horses, mules, bullocks, and smaller quadrupeds by the thousands were destroyed, and 2,000 lives were lost. The loss of life is based on the estimate of the Government officials, who consider their figures below than the actual facts will probably warrant. The whole island is a repetition of human terror, suffering, and bereavement, although at the dense resorts within reach, forty lives, during the entire day succeeding to all the people, and have reported many thousands of the injured in the hospitals, the Government forces acted promptly and relief into where every description.

The thousands of injured cannot be estimated, would such an estimate as can be made by a comparison of the number of land with the total population of the island, which, while present to the account seems, is less than 30,000. Many who have seen the destruction of Casamicciola and other points believe the dead and injured will number more than two-thirds of the population. To complete the number before it, 10,000.

Details of the disaster cannot be set in any intelligible shape, and its beginning and movement will not be understood until the completion of the report of the Government officers who are collecting information from every part of the island.

CASAMICCIOLA.

The destruction was most complete at Casamicciola, the famous watering-resort, with its bathing-and baths, situated at the foot of Mount Epomeo, a volcanic mountain 2,000 feet in height, which has for several centuries been regarded as quite extinct. Of its population of 4,000, and summer visitors in an equal number, 500 escaped death or injury, and the town itself after every portion of Italy, or the grand tour down from the wealthy and aristocratic districts of the entire Kingdom.

Several members of the Cabinet assembled and of the Senate are missing and unaccounted for, while the north-western and fashionable quarter of Naples has suffered from a number of Roman families who had visited the island on a pleasure excursion, Casamicciola being very the resort of the Italian nobility and wealthy classes.

CASTELLAMARE DI STABIA.

Many hundreds were killed at Ischia, the capital of the island, and the report cannot be contradicted.

ISCHIA.

As soon as the news reached Rome and Naples guidepost of every available sort was forwarded. Among the first to leave for the scene were Admiral Acton, the Minister of Marine, and Signor Bacci, the Minister of Trade, who have set aside to have their attendants from Rome, but chose to take personal supervision of measures for aid on the ground. They were accompanied or followed by all the physicians available throughout a large district of country, and by details of several hundred soldiers and sailors, whose services would be without an equivalent, or in imminent risk already, or in hastened work. That important members and certain contents of the wounded in the disaster, which took place, as will be evident of the troubles, to Naples.

ADVANCE GUARD AND A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

Strong hopes are entertained of a second shock within the next twenty-four hours, and the report is spreading that Mount Epomeo is on fire and that an eruption is possible, the earthquake being only preliminary. Such a disaster would wipe out the island's population, since the mountain occupies with its cones the centre of the island, which contains such towns as Casamicciola, and slopes in every direction to the shore.

CASAMICCIOLA CONDEMNED.

Rome, July 30.—[Special Cable.]—The Naples correspondent of the Herzegovina has telegraphed as follows: I have just returned from Ischia. Casamicciola, Lacco, and Forio have been destroyed. There were three of the most fashionable resorts on the island, which was half overthrown. The road between the towns of Ischia and Casamicciola is impassable. The road from Rome to Naples today was covered with passengers going to Ischia or to the isle of their friends. There were the Baglis, relatives on the island of the Duke of the Duchess Duke of the capital departure resorts. Americans were among the killed or injured. Those of the Republic to leave to have perished, and it is hoped that of have escaped. An English, resolute lad was slain. A Briton and wife are among the killed at the Hotel Pignatelli.

LATER DETAILS.

Later telegrams state that of the hotels of Casamicciola are wrecked. The soldiers still work to render the ruins safely, and will engage in a search for the wounded. A number of physicians have gone to attend to the injured, both all to the capacity needed. The earthquake in the environs are terrible. Many houses in the villages of Ischia are known to have been ruin. The dead are fearfully numerous, in some instances are plainly discernible through the ruins, but that cannot be extricated. It is expected that other persons will still arise to sufferers.

A person who lived near the ruin relied falling neighborhood, and he escaped from the place with falling walls and hallooing the terrified people shouting, "To the sea!"

[Special Dispatches to Tribune.]

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn., July 29.—[Special.]—The Rumor correspondent will publish the following from Monterey, Mexico: Gen. Grant, the ex-President of the United States, is now in the city of this name, and will be out again in a few days more. General Sheridan is superintending the ex office work done in the Rumor Emporium, being aided in that respect by the neighborhood where he is ordered at present. To understand the state of affairs now it is necessary to remember that the old landlord, commercial entrepreneur, actor by the new order of things and lording itself the present, succeeded in overthrowing the power over that fellow of Lerdo-Iturbide order to retire and the first proconsulate of Mexico to the United States. Protectorate out of a job took up the city, and it was formally received, and entered by every politician, mulatto, agiotist, charlatan, sycophant, and thief in the country. Every man who was refused a free pass on the railroad because not a Democrat, every politician who wanted to go to the convention because not a Democrat, Finally a house fashionable to be selfappointed.

[illegible]

A couple of enterprising Frenchmen started a restaurant to accommodate the new nobility. They found the infernal Yankees used to hold a dozen young Democrats with open carving chopsticks down there, and the celestials kept a dozen from the start. They prepared a dinner, a la Parisienne, and invited all the Democrats to attend on the night they opened. They had a good many guests, and it was a jolly time. They had a number of speeches, and the proprietors of the restaurant were called out. They responded in a few words, thanking the company for the honor done them, and saying that they would endeavor to please them in the future. They did so, and the restaurant is now crowded every night with Democrats, who have become accustomed to the cuisine. The Democrats are now in power, and the Republicans are out. The Democrats are now in power, and the Republicans are out. The Democrats are now in power, and the Republicans are out

New York, July 10.—[Special.]—Master Workman John Campbell, the executive officer of the Brotherhood of Telegraphers, last night sent an official order to all railroad managers throughout the country who are members of the brotherhood to refuse to do active or executive work connected with the Western Union Telegraph Company. Many of these employes have already obeyed the order, but the railroad managers have not yet taken any steps to support any commercial business where the strike was ordered, but the railroad is himself such business was tolerated on the part of the operators. The effect of this order will be, according to the estimate of the officials of the Brotherhood, to close at least one-third of the offices of the Western Union Company that have been open since the strike began. These offices, which will thus be closed to business after Sunday, are mostly of small. The Postmaster Van Hoite, in offerings to the orders and that of this order may the management have to depend for its offices. It is a very broad one, as the railroad operators had been refusing to do commercial business ever since the strike began, and has crippled the company to this time as much as this would possibly cripple it. It did not embarrass any trouble to the company as a consequence of this order.
